"The HIGH JUMPER"

Bugs and Porky had just arrived at the fair grounds for the annual Outdoor Sports Contest, when they met Elmer Fudd.

"Hi, Elmer," called Porky. "Which event are you going to enter?"

"Archewy," replied Elmer, producing his bow and arrows. Then, pointing to Bugs, he sneered, "I suppose this muscle-bound wabbit thinks he's going to win evewything."

Bugs replied haughtily, "I could if I tried, pal. I come from a long line of champions. Take my cousin Bartholomew Bunny . . ."

"Your cousin!" interrupted Porky. "You mean the winner of the national high jump award is a relative of yours?"

"The very same," replied Bugs. "Though, to tell the truth, Cousin Bart's a pain in the neck to me. He never lets a fellow forget how important he is. Someday, I'm going to take the greatest pleasure in showing him up. Just you wait and see."

"We won't have to wait long," Elmer said. "Your so-called cousin is honowawy judge of the high jump contest today, Bugs. Care to enter it and show him up? Ha, ha!"

"That I do," Bugs replied with feeling.

Porky eyed him admiringly. "I wouldn't miss seeing that for anything."

"I would," snorted Elmer as he walked away. "I'll be winning the archewy pwize while that wabbit is showing off, I will!"

"Look," Bugs exclaimed, pointing to the judge's stand, "there's Bartholomew right there! Hi, cousin!" he called.

Bartholomew looked down his nose at Bugs. "Howjedoo," he said haughtily.

"See what I mean?" Bugs muttered under his breath. "I've just got to break his record of fifteen feet. Look, Pork, when I get ready to jump, you pinch me, hear? I don't think that's against the rules. It's how far you jump that counts!"

"Okay," Porky agreed, "but it will have to be quite a pinch. Fifteen feet! Wow!"

A few minutes later, a worried Bugs joined the other contestants in line for the high jump. One after the other, they made their bids for the prize. Ten, twelve, then thirteen feet were the heights reached by the jumpers ahead of Bugs.

"This is terrible," Bugs fretted.

Porky had to agree. "Sure you want to go through with it?" he asked.

"NEXT!" shouted the announcer.

"That's me!" Bugs said nervously. "Okay, Porky . . . PINCH!"

POWIE! Bugs felt a stabbing pierce in his back. He left the ground swiftly and sailed high into the air, landing a moment later with a dull thud.

"Fifteen feet AND two inches!" the announcer shouted. "Our record-breaking champion is none other than Bugs Bunny, cousin of Bartholomew!"

"That was quite a pinch," Bugs said when Porky ran up to him.

Porky looked puzzled. "But, Bugs . . . I didn't get a chance to pinch you! You left the ground too fast."

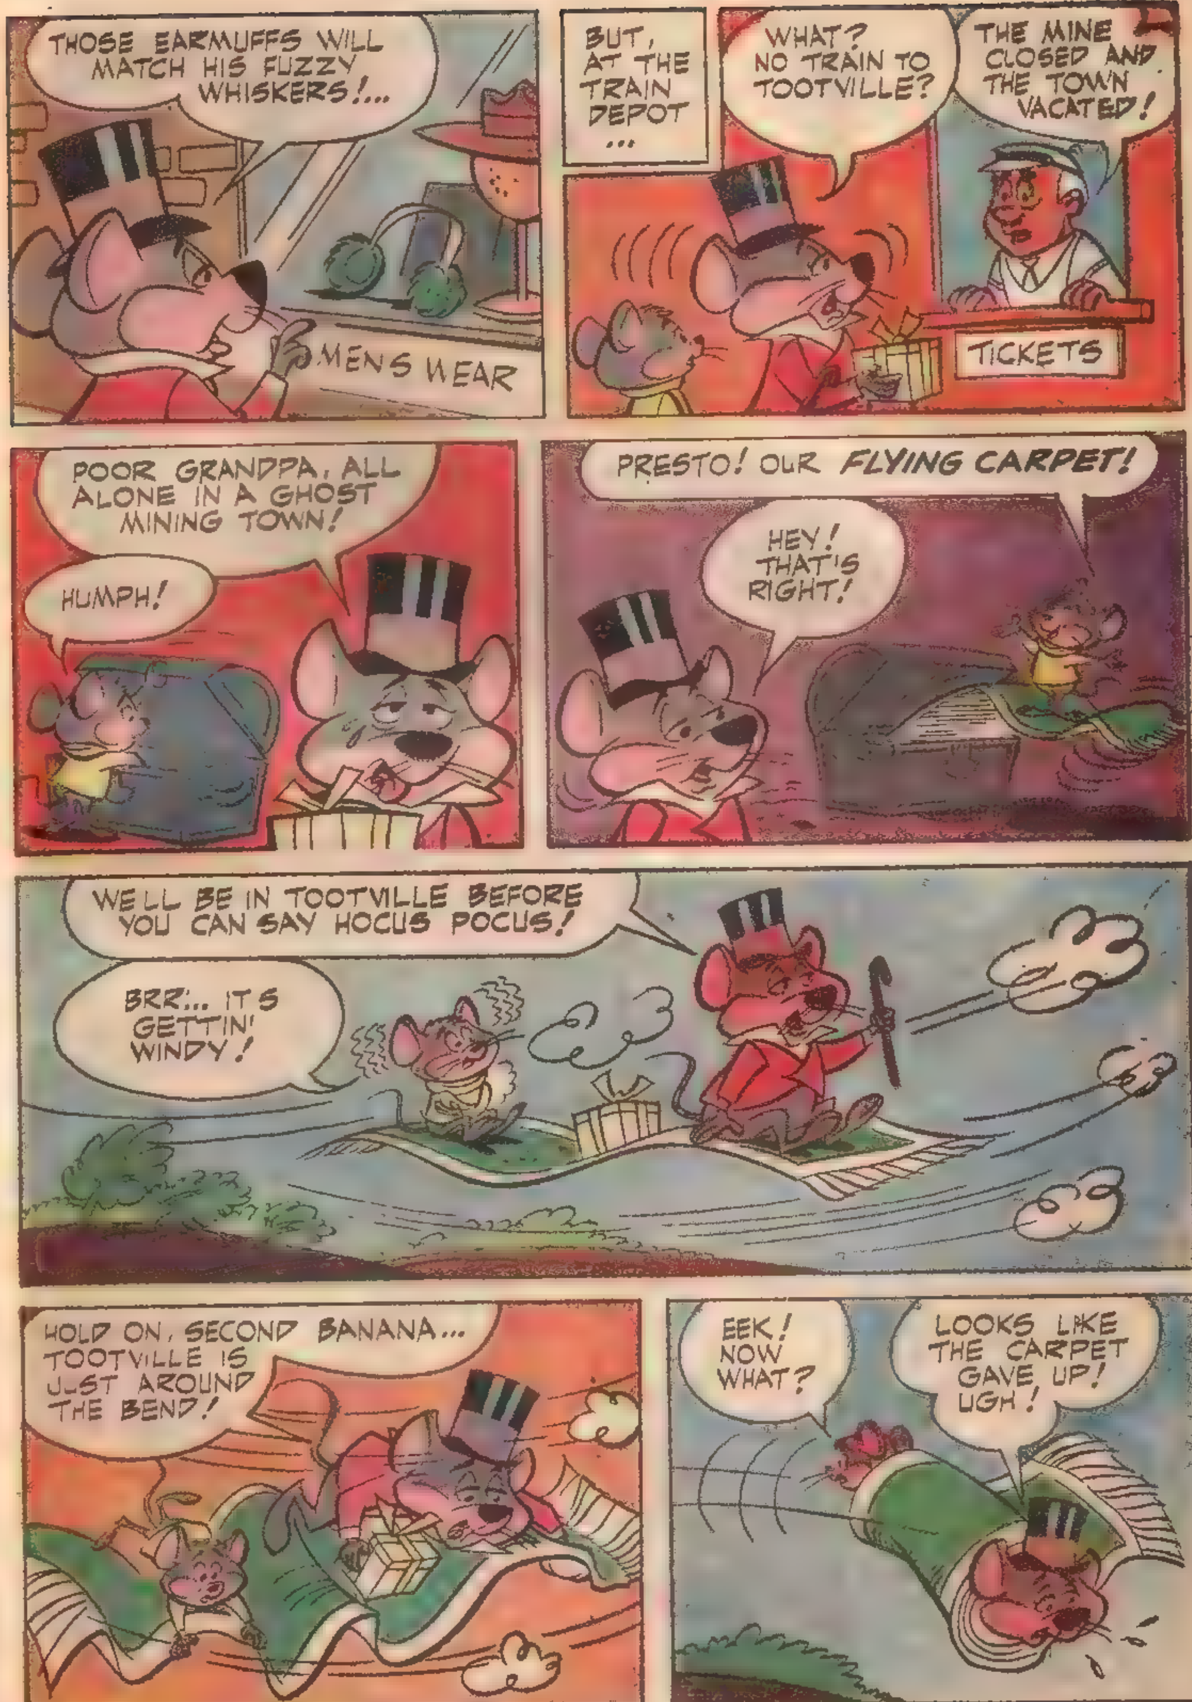

Just before Bugs was to receive his award, Elmer arrived from the archery contest beaming very happily.

"Congwatulations, wabbit," Elmer said. "I'm glad you won. I won, too! My arrow flew all the way over to the high jump stand! That's the kind of archer I am!"

Bugs and Porky exchanged glances. Then, they started to laugh. They laughed so hard Bartholomew could hardly pin the medal on Bugs's chest.

As a PHYSICIAN

You will enter the finest and most respected profession in the world, if you choose to be a physician! Working in your own office or in a hospital, you would diagnose diseases and treat people who are ill or injured. You would also be concerned with preventive medicine and with the mental and physical rehabilitation of patients.

Many physicians specialize in internal medicine, surgery, or other fields, while others are general practitioners. Some teach in medical schools or do research. Others combine teaching and private practice.

To be a physician you must have above-average intelligence, have an interest in science, possess good judgment, and be emotionally stable. Above all, you must be dedicated to helping others. Educational requirements are three or four years of college, followed by four years of study in medical school and one year of internship in a hospital. You must also pass a state examination. Specialists require from two to four additional years of study and training.

Medical training is costly and arduous, but physicians reap great personal compensation in their work. And although financial compensation is small at first, their incomes rise rapidly in a few years.

As a REGISTERED NURSE

You will be a modern Florence Nightingale and lead a rewarding life filled with great personal satisfaction in caring for others, if you choose to be a nurse! Working in a hospital, you would perform all necessary duties in caring for the sick and injured; help the patients recover physically and emotionally; administer medications and treatments prescribed by physicians; observe, evaluate, and record symptoms and progress of patients; and give instructions to students.

Some nurses work in physicians' offices. Others work in public health, in clinics, or provide nursing care to patients in their homes. Their duties include teaching good health practices. Nurses also work in industry, treating minor injuries or sicknesses. Teaching the arts and skills of nursing and medical research attracts others.

To become a nurse, you must have a desire to help others, be dependable, have good judgment, patience, and be in very good physical and mental health. You must complete a two- or three-year course in an accredited school of nursing and pass a state test for a license.

Registered nurses find a great demand for their skills and services wherever they go, and they command good salaries.
